

Control of Drywood Termites

infestation or reinfestation after eradication prevented by treatment with inert dusts nontoxic to humans or animals

Walter Ebeling and Robert E. Wagner

Drywood termites—about as important in southern California as subterranean termites, here spread north to used to prevent damage to a building's substructure by subterranean termites, such as a ceiling joist and plate or a rafter and sheathing—will hold a large amount of available cellulose and the

